great deal of interest because KKD, the man branded as “The Finest”, is a celebrity and has tens of thousands of followers and admirers. I, myself, am an admirer and grew up on one of KKD's popular radio programs “Pops on the Move” in the 1990s, a program I never missed. But behind the glitz and glamour of an accomplished show biz icon lies a troubling issue.... ”

Dasaint Thomas Being a celebrity should neither put anyone above the law nor below the law. Thus, KKD's alleged rape should be adjudicated in court according to the laws of Ghana - not the morality or perceived pious standards of those who scream the loudest - and he should be found guilty or otherwise, purely per the laws of Ghana. Whereas we may frown on a 50-ish year old man engaging in sexual congress with a teenager, so far as that teen is above the age of consent, and the sexual act is consensual, then that's not statutory rape....but if it's proven that KKD raped the girl, then he must face the law.

William Nyarko Roland Addo, if it had been heard in court that would have been a different matter because the journalist would be reporting from the court. But even there, some exercise of discretion is warranted. It would appear that Starfm was reporting from case filing which was yet to be heard in court (hearing set for January 7). Although this is not unusual to report from filings, leaking it presumably to Starfm with such choice of angle to the story, can infuriate readers rather than, discredit the girl. There's no doubt that KKD and his team have deep connections in the media and are going to work towards getting favorable coverage but they must be careful not to overplay it because it could backfire. They could win the legal case but lose in the court of public opinion. You don't want an OJ Simpson or George Zimmerman type of legal win.

William Nyarko Francis Eshun-Baidoo, I struggle with the issue you struggle with. We've been socialized to the notion that if you don't have money, then don't ask someone to go to lunch or dinner as aptly stated by Michael Brew. However, this is a different environment. Do we use our Ghanaian socialization or the reality of our American environment? There are no easy answers.

Ato Aidoo It explains the strong influence of your present environment. I still feel uncomfortable when a guy holds my hand in ogyakrom . The thought of the obvious connotation exported from present environment reigns supreme. Unconsciously we are withdrawing from the dictates of our former environment. A careful mix considering sensibilities in both environments helps. You're not alone.
